Overview of the Presentation

Podcast: Key messages

Mapping the Irish education policy landscape

Discussion questions

Podcast: Key messages

Importance of planning for alignment and coherence

Recursive and dynamic relationship between policy as
'text' and 'discourse'

All stakeholders are involved in 'crafting' coherence in a competent system

The educational policy landscape is a complex ecosystem

Implications for curriculum redevelopment

- What is the current structure of our policy landscape?
 - Supranational (international)
 - Macro (national)
 - Meso (regional)
 - Micro (school)

Levels of the Irish education system structure

Observations and considerations

Tradition of centralisation?

Fragmented centralisation?

Lack of regional structures?

Sufficient connectivity between levels/actors?

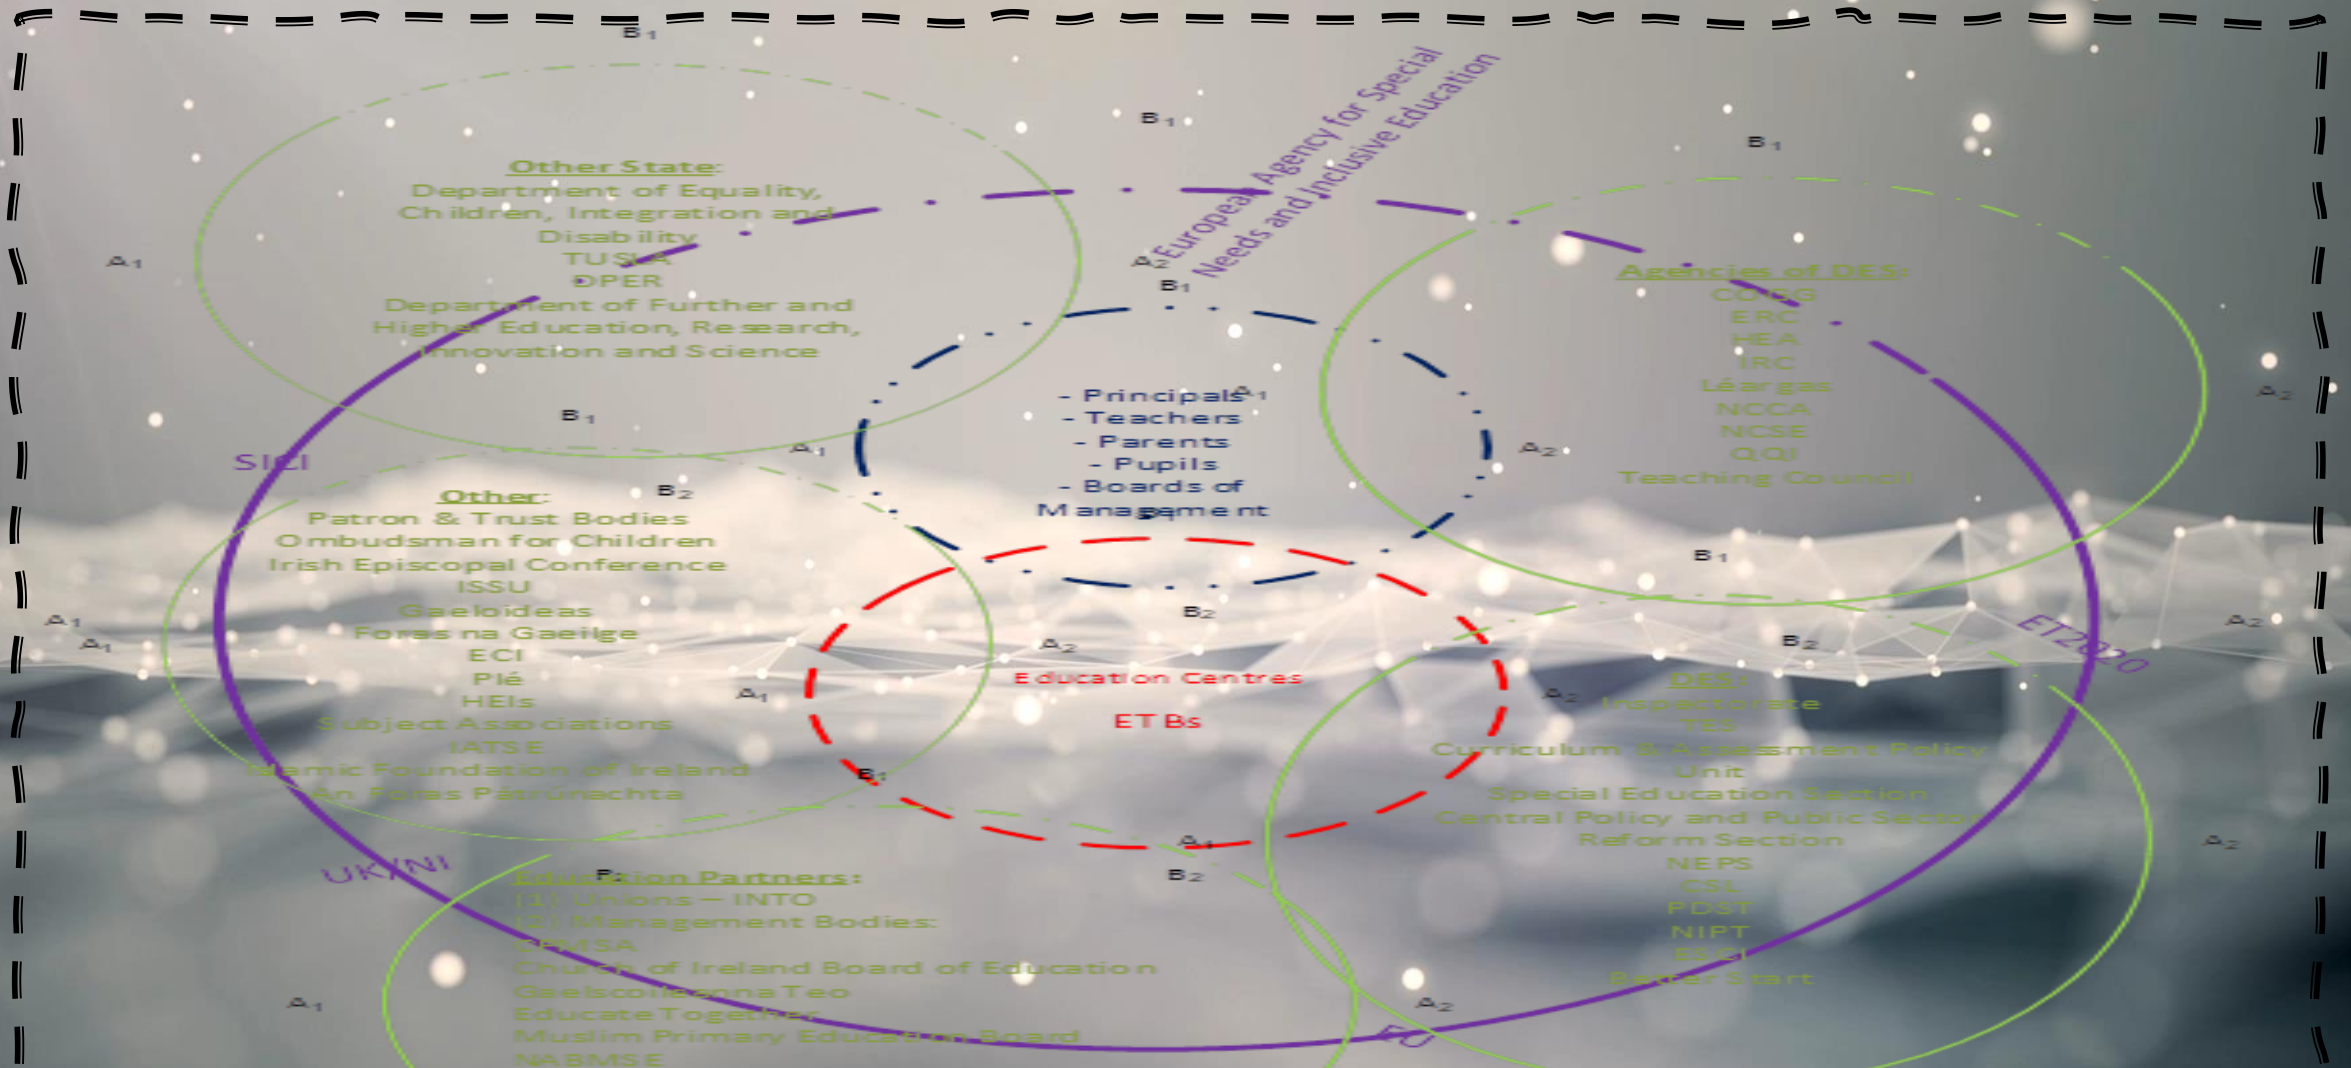

Effectiveness of consultation structures?

Time and space at school level?

Redeveloping the curriculum as a competent system

“...build bridges between many levels, factors and actors.”

Questions for Discussion

As we continue the journey of curriculum redevelopment...

- What are the current strengths of the Irish educational policy landscape in terms of achieving alignment and coherence?
- In this change management process, what opportunities do you see for you and your organisation in contributing to the policy alignment and coherence necessary?

Knowing that curriculum change is a disruptive process for many....

- In what ways can you use your 'zone of influence' to cultivate the conditions for the ongoing development, introduction and enactment of the redeveloped curriculum in the months and years ahead?

And finally...

Acknowledging the number of bodies and organisations at the macro (national) level and the relatively few at meso (regional) level.....

- What activities and structures between the macro (national) and the micro (local) levels would support additional connectivity and coherence in the context of curriculum change?
